While there are plenty of places to visit in Nashville relating to food, culture, and music, there are some things that are an absolute must for your first time visit.

The following is a list of the top 3 things that you must do in Nashville:

1. Country Music Hall of Fame and Museum

   If you wish to be enriched with the history and culture of country life, then you must take a tour of this large, two-floor gallery of artifacts and exhibits. Along with the museum artifacts, visitors will also enjoy shopping and dining in this expansive space of musical history.

2. Downtown Nashville

   Unlike other downtowns that are more aligned to the corporate world, Downtown Nashville caters to a wide range of interests and aesthetics. So, whether you're traveling for the purpose of sight-seeing the city's hub, or just want to try different cuisines with your friends and family, Downtown Nashville is ready to serve your every interest.

3. Nashville Parthenon

   Looking to add a hint of European touch to your visit? The Nashville Parthenon is there to fulfill your European vision. It is not only a duplicate of the Parthenon in Athens, Greece, but is also a home to astonishing works of art and historical wonders such as the 42-foot standing statue of Athena located in an atrium inside the majestic building.

Although this itinerary can be extended further on, the three activities listed above take you on a sneak-peak, yet wholesome journey of all that Nashville has to offer. So, all you have to do is let the country music sway you towards a unique vacation experience.
