Hey, we get it...

It's not easy to stay calm with the ups and downs of crypto investing.

You don't always have the funds to take advantage when the price is low.

You're afraid to buy when the price is high in case you don't make any profits.

You're constantly anxious about market volatility and losing everything.

Say hello to the minimal-stress method for cryptocurrency investing:

Recurring Buy is the dollar cost- averaging strategy trusted by 59% of crypto investors.*

*According to recent industry research.

“

Saving 100 € in Bitcoin per week over the last three years turned 14,400 € into 23,904 €.

This is how you build wealth consistently without worrying constantly.

Buy the dip in your sleep

You can add more cryptocurrency to your account every week or month automatically without it stealing your time or headspace.

Growth without the guesswork

When you stop trying to "time it right" and trust in this proven process, you won't just build your portfolio every month—you'll have more time to "actually" study investing and become a real pro.

Lower the risk of huge losses

Many new investors buy when coins hit all-time highs — risking it all in one lump sum. Spreading your investment leaves you less exposed to sudden price drops.

Recurring Buy FAQs

What is DCA?

Dollar cost averaging is a widely used strategy for achieving major financial goals over the long term. With DCA, you buy small amounts of an asset according to a regular schedule – for example, 25 € of Bitcoin or Solana each week. You continue to make these scheduled purchases regardless of price changes. Depending on your goals, you might practice DCA investing for a few months or for many years.

DCA investing delivers five main benefits:

How often are purchases made?

How are historical returns calculated?

When is DCA more effective than lump-sum investing?

Can I change or discontinue my purchases?

What are the minimum and maximum purchases?

How is ROI calculated?
