

'Girl' all dolled up now

They're all a little too grown up.

American Girl is celebrating its 40th anniversary, and to celebrate, Mattel Inc. announced it's reimagining its beloved historical characters (inset, one before and after) through a "contemporary lens" — much to the chagrin of diehard fans.

The "modern" dolls have caused a rustle online, with many claiming that the new updates go against body positivity — complete with "an upper bleph, a blowout, and a glp-l."

"They gave them Ozempic, lobotomies, and TikTok channels (seriously, those faces are SO vacant. nothing behind the eyes). massive yikes," one person wrote in a Reddit thread showing a first look at the dolls.

"God forbid that girls have dolls that don't give them a complex," someone said.

"Why do they fully look like they're on Ozempic?" one asked.

"They look like AI made them," a user quipped.

"Weird giant heads...they look like Bratz," one noted.

Brooke Steinberg