

Face of Liberty, on a coin

What better way to celebrate America's 250th birthday than by owning a piece of Lady Liberty?

Americans can now own a piece of history, thanks to Alchemist Mint, a precious metals operation based in Rhode Island.

The mint announced last week that it will be making a limited-edition coin, named Lady Liberty Enlightening the World, made of copper removed from the Statue of Liberty during its 1984-1986 restoration.

Each artifact (pictured), which will set buyers back $250 (how appropriate), will be 30mm and octagonal-shaped, individually serialized and edge-engraved.

On its face, 50 stars will frame Lady Liberty's profile with her torch over her heart. On the back will be a laurel wreath with words from the Declaration of Independence, with an American Flag in the background.

Those looking to get their hands on one of these coins can reserve one at reallibertycopper.com with a $25 deposit.
