Fall is the Perfect Time for Teardrop Camping

Honestly, we can't think of a bad time of year for teardrop camping. But there's something about the fall, the cooler days turning into chilly cozy evenings, the changing leaves, the smaller crowds, that makes it one of the best times to get outside. When properly prepared, fall camping trips can rival the best spring and summer trips.

Transitional Seasons

Since fall weather can vary, teardrop camping can is a perfect way to be in the great outdoors as the weather changes with the seasons. When temperatures drop overnight, you'll stay warmer in a fully insulated teardrop camping trailer since you're not sleeping on the ground. And if it rains, you don't have to worry about your tent or gear getting wet – or the royal pain of drying things out before storing them for next time.

If it's a warm spell, you'll be prepared for that, too, with screened windows and a ceiling fan in your teardrop camping trailer cabin. Truthfully, teardrop camping is excellent all year long, but you can maximize the benefit in seasons when temperatures and weather are more variable.

Best of all, your Colorado Teardrop trailer can easily convert from sleeping mode to indoor dining mode if you find that you need to pass the time while unpleasant weather moves through. Don't forget to pack your board games and that book you've been meaning to read! Just settle into your little cabin.

Room to Pack

g often requires a little more forethought around packing. You'll want to be sure to have the proper clothing to keep cool during the day and to layer up to stay warm as the sun goes down. Similarly, you might need an extra blanket or two. And you might be thinking of some heartier meals to keep you full and warm.

Never fear. Teardrop camping offers extra room to pack accordingly. Colorado Teardrop camping trailers are known for exceptional storage, so you can always pack a little extra to face unpredictable weather better. Additional space and storage in the kitchen galley also ensure you'll have a hearty hot meal when you're ready.

Go (almost) Anywhere and Get Away!

It's also no secret that teardrop trailers can go to lots of places the bigger campers can't get to. But as crowds thin out in the fall months, you'll find those perfect spots to truly spend time away from it all.

Check out Outside's list of National Parks (https://www.outsideonline.com/adventure-travel/national-parks/national-park-reservations-winter-fall/) that are lifting some restrictions for fall. Hearty Fall Cooking

Making meals for summer camping trips can be straightforward or super fancy but eating a heavy hot meal in the hotter months is likely not your go-to. But as the nights turn cooler, many fall campers look to heartier and warmer meals. Teardrop camping answers this call with ample storage and a spacious galley that could cook a Thanksgiving meal.

Colorado Teardrop's galleys include spacious countertops with room to stay organized and are designed for a sizeable cooler – or two(!), a camp stove and storage for utensils, prep items, plates, cleaning tub and more. On-demand hot water is a very popular add-on at Colorado Teardrops and super helpful when cleaning up – whether it's warm or cold outside.

Our Favorite Fall Colorado Spots, You Ask?

We're partial to all of Colorado. Still, a few of our fall favorites include Durango (https://mild2wildrafting.com/durango-colorado/where-to-stay-in-durango/camping-in-durango.html), Saddlehorn (https://www.nps.gov/colm/planyourvisit/saddlehorn-campground.htm) and Rocky Mountain National Park (https://www.nps.gov/romo/planyourvisit/camping.htm), where some campgrounds stay open year-round, and crowds tend to thin out after September. Our best advice: reserve your spot before you pack up and head out.
