Welcome to the Transcultural Islam Research Network's searchable Directory of Scholars and Experts on Islam and Muslim communities. The primary purpose of this database is to provide a way to locate university- based scholars and researchers, but we recognize that not all experts have university affiliations, and therefore we do consider applications from experts outside the academy.

Academic Live Tweeting

Twitter is fast becoming a way for scholars to share information and resources and begin collaborations.

If you are attending or holding a conference, TIRN invites you to live-tweet the presentations and discussions for the benefit of the larger academic community.

Please make a hashtag for the conference that will allow your tweets to be easily followed, for example #IslamArtAfrica13, and place it and @tirnscholars in the body of the tweet so that TIRN can keep its subscribers up to date. You could also submit your event to Inside Higher Ed, eduTweetups page so that it can be found by others.

Need some pointers about academic tweeting? Begin Here.
