For information about COVID-19 testing and care, vaccination, and visitor guidelines at Duke please visit www.dukehealth.org.

Operating in maintenance mode. Go online.

Donors Your Gifts at Work

Filter By Category: All

Filter By Year: All

Search the Blog: julie poucher harbin APPLY

Our donors and volunteers make all of DCI's accomplishments possible. The DCI Donor Blog highlights how our researchers, physicians, nurses, patients, donors, and volunteers are working together every day to change the rules on cancer. To share feedback or story ideas, please contact Angela Spivey, Duke University School of Medicine Communications. To subscribe to Breakthroughs, a twice-yearly magazine produced by DCI Development, please click here. To make a gift, please visit gifts.duke.edu/dci or contact DCI Development at 919-385-3120.

A Buzzer Beater

Duke Cancer Institute has given stage 4 cancer survivor Milos Bogetic precious extra time with his wife and growing young son.

JANUARY 21, 2021
Patient Stories

"Oncology Jedi" Joseph Moore Retires From Clinical Practice

Duke Cancer Institute hematologic oncologist Joseph Moore, MD, after 44 years, retired from clinical practice this summer. He and colleagues reflect on his legacy.

OCTOBER 7, 2019
Announcements / Features

#MyDukeCancerStory: I'm Glad You Asked...

Medical family therapist Patrick Plumeri guides cancer patients and their loved ones as they explore big life questions and helps them manage the disease's daily stresses.

AUGUST 1, 2019
Features / Patient Stories

#MyDukeCancerStory: On Teardrop Time

Karin and David Driver share a glimpse of their everyday life outside the walls of Duke Cancer Center and open up about their journey here.

JUNE 28, 2019
Patient Stories

#MyDukeCancerStory: A Helping Hand

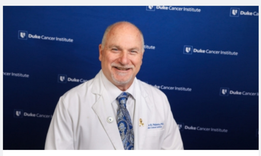
Substitute teacher and cancer survivor Tim McKenna, was teaching history at the Durham School of the Arts when a gas explosion ripped through downtown Durham.

JUNE 7, 2019
Patient Stories / Features

#MyDukeCancerStory: A Fair Shake

For 20 years, Nadine Barrett, PhD, has worked to reduce health disparities among underrepresented populations by increasing their access to care and...

APRIL 21, 2019
DCI Research / Features



#MDCS: A Champion For the Underserved

Deputy Director of Duke Cancer Institute Steven Patierno, PhD, is energized by his decades-long work in cancer control and cancer health disparities.

FEBRUARY 1, 2019
DCI Research / Features

#MyDukeCancerStory: One-Two Punch

There wasn't much that could slow down Keith Nguyen, a Merck pharmaceutical employee who described himself as being "in perfect health."

NOVEMBER 2, 2018
Features / DCI Research

#MyDukeCancerStory: Family Ties

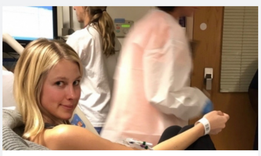
Katie Jantzi (née Yelenic) was just 9 years old, and her sister Megan Yelenic, 5, when their mother died 18 years ago of metastatic breast cancer.

OCTOBER 1, 2018
Patient Stories / DCI Research

#MyDukeCancerStory: A Labor of Love

Melanie Bacheler worked full time, coached gymnastics part-time, and was a new mom of a six-month-old when her mother was diagnosed with stage 3 ovarian cancer.

AUGUST 31, 2018
Special Events / Patient Stories / Features / DCI Research



#MyDukeCancerStory: Young Designer Reimagines Life

After college graduation, Shannon Voelkel started her "dream job" working for a well-known interior design firm. A year-and-a-half later, she learned life had other plans.

AUGUST 1, 2018
Patient Stories

#MyDukeCancerStory: Lucky Seven

Bob Thomas, who was given a terminal metastatic cancer diagnosis nearly eight years ago, is not precisely sure exactly which cancer he survived.

JULY 2, 2018
Patient Stories / DCI Research