

Zyloware Signs License for Randy Jackson Eyewear

By Staff \(/author/staff/\)

Monday, March 5, 2007 1:36 PM

LONG ISLAND CITY, N.Y.--The Zyloware Corporation announced they have signed a license agreement to manufacture, market, and distribute Randy Jackson Eyewear in an agreement brokered by ACI Licensing, formerly known as MAGNA Global Licensing.

"We're very excited about our recent partnership with Mr. Jackson. Randy Jackson has a remarkable 'sixth sense' for success. He represents high energy and good values; he embodies excellent taste, and is a true gentleman in everything he does. There isn't a better person to represent America's next brand of eyewear," said Christopher Shyer, president of Zyloware.

Randy Jackson (c) with the Shyer family.

The product is in the beginning stages of development and is scheduled to hit the market by January 2008. Jackson will be involved in the product's development and will be heavily involved in the brand's promotion and endorsement.

ADVERTISEMENT

"If you need eyewear or just want to be very cool and fashionable, these are the only glasses you will be wearing," said Jackson.

Randy Jackson's music industry career spans more than 20 years. He began playing bass at age 13 and got his big break playing bass in the band Journey in the 1980s. Since then he has produced numerous Grammy Award-winning albums and has worked with pop music stars like Mariah Carey, Whitney Houston, Celine Dion, *NSYNC, Madonna, Elton John and Destiny's Child. Jackson was vice president of A&R at Columbia Records for eight years, followed by four years as senior vice president of A&R at MCA Records. Today, millions of people are familiar with him through his role as a judge on American Idol.

This article was created using several editorial tools, that may include using AI as part of the process. Human editors reviewed this content before publication.

© Copyright 2025 Jobson Medical Information LLC. All rights reserved. Reproduction in whole or in part without permission is prohibited.

ADVERTISEMENT