There are multiple royal families strewn across the European continent. Some of these are successfully heading the constitutional monarchies, while others are more or less enjoying an aristocratic celebrity lifestyle. But none of them match the aura, pomp, presence, fame, and familiarity of the British Royal Family.

It's no wonder that it's constantly covered across multiple media outlets, including traditional and modern channels.

That's where these celebrated YouTubers come into the picture. There is no dearth of content from this enigmatic royal family, so there is no shortage of YouTube channels jumping on the bandwagon to broadcast the piping hot royal tea.

After sifting through multiple YouTube channels — big and small, well-established and newly started — streaming similar and dissimilar content for hours on end, I have finally managed to shortlist a few of my favorites. This list includes everyone from broadcasters, commentators, body language analysts, bookkeepers, and fashion reviewers to critical thinkers.

Here we go in no particular order:

PDina: She says and she slays. One of my absolute favorites for her open and honest opinions on the British Royal Family. She says it as it is, without going round in complicated explanations. Since she is an American, she brings a fresh perspective on the latest drama streaming from California. A highly recommended channel bringing in a different perspective from across the pond with added cultural nuances to its viewers.

The Royal Rogue: The second channel of the famous Body Language Guy sticks true to its reputation. You will get some interesting analysis, in-depth critical commentary, and live streaming of major royal events like Trooping the Colour. Of course, there is a right amount of humor and sarcasm strewn across it. For his immediate connection with the audience and his authoritative voice on human behavior, I suggest you subscribe to this channel instantly.

Murky Meg: An absolute must-watch for her sharp wit and no-holds-barred approach with engaging content. It's a faceless channel, but that feeling of missing someone on the screen won't last beyond the initial few seconds as the narrative and storytelling fill that visual void. Besides the recent happenings in the royal household, she passionately covers the latest (pot) shots coming from the ex-royal duo stationed in California.

Cheere Denise: She burst onto my YouTube binge radar because of her brilliantly thorough reading of 'Spare.' That nasal Cockney accent and critical commentary are on point, as are her timely quips on the royal family stories. However, her channel extends beyond the royal coverage with book readings, critical analysis, and pop culture commentary. Bonus tip: if you are dashing off for the weekend and want a quick wrap-up of the current pop culture happenings, then you ought not to miss her weekly recaps every Friday.

Dan Wootton Outspoken: An independent media person covering the latest round of news from London. Although he covers other bits of current affairs and talks to a variety of people, his refined approach to royal news is unmissable. Being an insider in the TV circuit with access to royal coverage has helped him build a sizeable audience.

Royal Fashion News: Like me, if you are looking for seasonal fashion clues from the stylish royal ladies, then this is the place to be. You can subscribe to it for all the trending and traditional royal fashion updates, along with timely commentary about the latest royal news.

SueMe: There are so many reasons to like, subscribe to, and follow this channel since Sue discusses many interesting topics like DIY, mental health, and the latest trends besides the royal stories. What's more amazing is her categorization of such different topics by tagging them in specific segments targeted for specific audiences. But whichever is the topic of conversation, you can be assured of Sue's deep analysis, critical voice, and 360-degree view shining through the episode. For royal watchers, look out for the 'Just Chattin'" segment published twice a week.

According 2taz: Taz is based out of England and thus, brings in the authentic, local aura to her channel. Her animated chats with other YouTube creators are fun to stream for all the banter, royal gossip, and humorous discussions. Her regular videos are equally amazing for all the timely updates on royal news, stories, and people. As she is a British woman living closer to many royal residences, we also get to see her tours to visit them, her commentary about the latest royal programs, and a much-needed perspective on the lesser-known royals. All this with proper historic or local context makes it one of the most watched channels among the royal family fans.

And yes, this list won't be complete without a few complimentary mentions, such as The Vintage Read Show, HG Tudor — Knowing the Narcissist: Ultra, The Royal Grift, and Avid Gardener.

So, let's put the kettle on, empty the biscuit tin, and settle down with a nice mug of tea for the fabulous royal news roundup.
